

FRANCE TODAY

The Magazine of French Travel and Culture

October 2012
$4.95

Bountiful Burgundy: A Gourmet Tour

The Winemakers of Louis Jadot

Paris: Where the Bobos Are

VOLUME 27, NO. 9
www.francetoday.com

You could be an amateur shopper to appreciate Galerie Lafayette's grand amphitheater. The Art Nouveau masterpiece has drawn new meaning from its architecture.

Associate it with fall in view of its unveiling in 1912. On October 16, the renowned department store kicks off a seasonal celebration, honoring the iconic French couturier as a Parisian classic. After years, Galerie Lafayette is light sensitive. "Mystique" and the main store exterior that will remain a landmark, mingling with the natural light in the building's facade and with special, new star lights designed to augment the dramatic gardeners' display. The new facade is a total surprise, a debut from Knoll and Le Corbusier (1924)—a classic in discussing the influence of shopping on architecture—to create a special exhibit honoring the architect's building, which started out in 1895 as a 100-square-foot dry goods store. Less than two decades later, it had expanded to 40,000 square feet, representing a milestone in the construction of Galeries, interiors and the wider creative world, we include designers, in shop events and online-commerce designs. The century exhibit lines, with an accompanying book, trace the store's history with art and photography, newspaper photos, posters, sketches, window displays, film and more. A series of live talks discusses art at Château de Drouot and its importance in architecture, along with special guided tours of the Art Nouveau and the expansion by the store's Antoine and Thérèse (1912). For more information, contact art@lafayette.com. 40 Blvd. des Capucines, 75001, 31.42.63.42.42 and women prints in saturated periwinkle, navy and rust. The Knitted in Brittany collection features ever-fashionable, handmade Breton fisherman sweaters. Along with a "curated" selection from international designers—including men's oxfords from the British shoemaker Alden and tailored shirts from Gitman Bros. in Pennsylvania—one of the boutique's big draws is a roster of exclusive collaborations with cutting-edge French brands, like sleek leather-and-suede booties by Avril, sneakers by the eco-brand Veja and travel-savvy accessories from Koo de Cuir.

3 | www.francetoday.com

The ravishing selection of housewares includes subtly hued porcelains, table linens, scented candles and some modern home furnishings. There are also books and hard-to-find European cosmetics brands. To sum it up, pretty much everything for the well-appointed Parisian. 128 rue Vieille du Temple, 3rd, 01.44.61.00.14. www.frenchtrotters.fr

A MAN'S WORLD

It's a mystery: how does Hollington remain one of Paris's best-kept secrets, with a worldwide mailing list of 14,000 devoted followers and some of the most comfortable, versatile and distinctive men's clothing in town? Maybe it's designer Patric Hollington's good-natured insistence on bucking the trends in favor of his own appealing mix of classic and modern, or just because he's an Irishman in Paris. Hollington has lived and worked in the city's sophisticated Saint Germain neighborhood for 30 years, and he manages to blend an Irish practicality and insistence on comfort with a French sense of style and fit, without being too rigidly formal or

The coupole at Galerie Lafayette

SO VERY FRENCH

The beautiful new FrenchTrotters store in the upper Marais is a revelation for devotees of timeless French chic. The light-drenched boutique was a trailblazer on the chic rue de Charonne in 2005, with a handpicked collection of exclusively French fashion brands for men and women. The first dedicated men's store opened in the Marais in 2008, followed in 2010 by a childrenswear shop—Little FrenchTrotters—at 28 rue de Charonne, a few steps from the original boutique. That same year, FrenchTrotters introduced its namesake label, an understated collection of contemporary classic clothes and accessories that emphasize quality fabrics, style and cut—and, of course, Frenchness—over trendiness.

The new, impeccably designed 2,000-square-foot flagship boutique assembles menswear, womenswear and a superb new housewares collection under one roof. For Fall 2012, the FrenchTrotters Made in India line features casual chic clothes in fluid silk and cotton prints in saturated periwinkle, navy and rust. The Knitted in Brittany collection features ever-fashionable, handmade Breton fisherman sweaters. Along with a "curated" selection from international designers—including men's oxfords from the British shoemaker Alden and tailored shirts from Gitman Bros. in Pennsylvania—one of the boutique's big draws is a roster of exclusive collaborations with cutting-edge French brands, like sleek leather-and-suede booties by Avril Gau, sneakers by the eco-brand Veja and travel-savvy accessories from Koo de Cuir.

The ravishing selection of housewares includes subtly hued porcelains, table linens, scented candles and some modern home furnishings. There are also books and hard-to-find European cosmetics brands. To sum it up, pretty much everything for the well-appointed Parisian. 128 rue Vieille du Temple, 3rd, 01.44.61.00.14. www.frenchtrotters.fr

A MAN'S WORLD

It's a mystery: how does Hollington remain one of Paris's best-kept secrets, with a worldwide mailing list of 14,000 devoted followers and some of the most comfortable, versatile and distinctive men's clothing in town? Maybe it's designer Patric Hollington's good-natured insistence on bucking the trends in favor of his own appealing mix of classic and modern, or just because he's an Irishman in Paris. Hollington has lived and worked in the city's sophisticated Saint Germain neighborhood for 30 years, and he manages to blend an Irish practicality and insistence on comfort with a French sense of style and fit, without being too rigidly formal or