ULII PLATE

ULII PLATE SIAM RED

The ULII Plate was inspired by stackable plates existing vase designs, and Japanese Zen garden philosophy. Each ULII Plate has unique characteristics: wood grain, finish, and utility. Combined with a small zen garden concept: sand, wood, and/or decorative flowers, the plate makes for a powerfully relaxing statement and addition to a home.

ULII PLATE SIAM RED

The red edition is called Siam Red. This color was inspired by traditional Thai wood finishing, which is rarely seen nowadays, even in Thailand, because there are few wood technicians that can do this technique in Thailand. It takes more than 10 days to paint the wood products with this technique. Moreover, this technique is mostly found in ancient Thai woodwork.

Nowadays, this wood finishing style is mostly found in the Grand Palace, temples and museums

ÜLII DESIGN STUDIO ULII PLATE

We have an opportunity to collaborate with one of the oldest chair workshops in Bangkok. Due to the amount of the excess wood from their manufacturing process, the owner of the workshop needed to create value from the excess wood. This factor inspired us to design products that use their surplus as the main material and produce them using traditional Thai craftsmanship.

ÜLII DESIGN STUDIO ULII PLATE

The ULII Plate is manufactured in one of the oldest wood workshops in Bangkok. The carefully designed wooden pieces are carefully produced by hand with sophisticated 20th century techniques not meant for mass production, so every piece will have its own specific wood tone, pattern from unique wood grain specific to a particular Siam Neem Tree, and color, making every piece unique and limited. Considering the quality of wood and workmanship, only three to four pieces can be produced in a day, with some potential for growth.

SIAM BLACK

The Siam Black Edition was produced using traditional Thai ancient wood painting technique. The wood painter needs to paint and dry it three times, and each coat takes two days to finish. The wood is placed in a drying room for it to absorb the paint and have that rich, dark color.
