

Angkla Shipping Container, 2015

Clockwise from Top Left: An earlier construction photo featuring the steel truss frame of the structure. A close-up view of the main entry into the container. An earlier conceptual sketch of the project stacking two 40-foot containers and offsetting them to create balconies. Exterior perspective from the main road. Concept image of shipping containers inspiring the nautical concept.

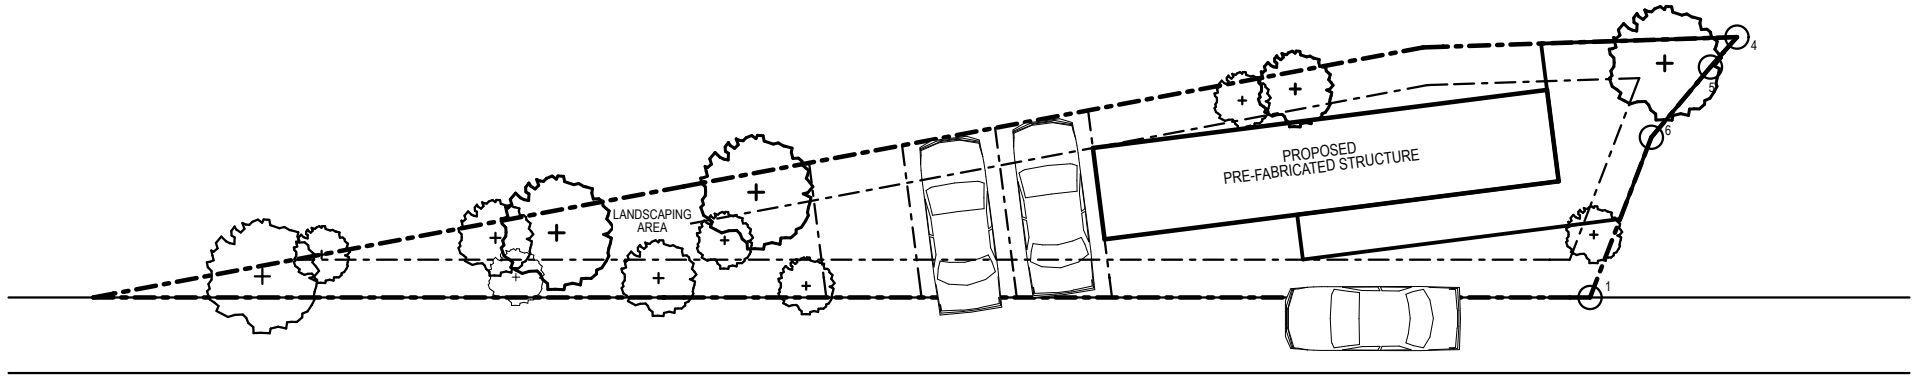

The Angkla Shipping Container is a temporary structure constructed along Tagaytay City's main road, used as a campaign office for the party list Angkla. Meaning anchor in English, Angkla supports all the Filipino sea men around the world. The structure's concept was to invoke a nautical theme to represent what the party list stands for.

After the campaign ended in early 2016, the office was converted to a store that sold homemade goods featuring products made by nuns in the adjacent convent.

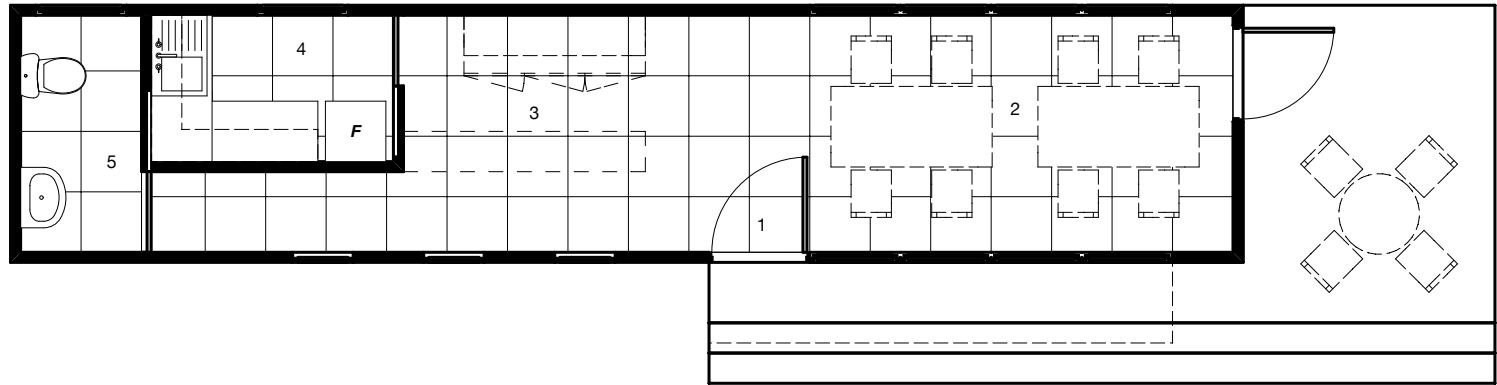

The structure was originally designed as a shipping container to be pre-fabricated in a warehouse and delivered on site, but throughout the project's construction phase, it would have been a logistical nightmare to bring a 40-foot container on site. The solution was to build a prefabricated structure, much like temporary facilities in construction sites, which can be later on, taken down when the need arises.

Site Development Plan 1:100m

- 1. Entry
- 2. Meeting Area
- 3. Cashier
- 4. Service Area
- 5. Powder Room

Floor Plan 1:75m

Technical Drawings